Local Firm Named to ERA Real Estate Top 200

Electronic Realty Associates, Inc. (ERA) has named ERA Vernon E. Anderson Real Estate to its Top 200 category for the second quarter of 1990. This group represents the top 10 percent of ERA member brokers nationwide, based on production figures for sales volume and transactions.

Thomas E. Schmitt, president of the ERA Real Estate Network division, commended the Top 200 award winners on their efforts.

"The standards of performance set by this group are inspiring to all ERA member brokers," Schmitt said. "The Top 200 members prove that success is attainable through hard work, professionalism and devotion to customers.

"We are honored to be ranked among the ERA Top 200," said Kevin Anderson, broker for ERA Vernon E. Anderson Real Estate. "The support we receive from ERA Real Estate, in terms of products and services, gives us a competitive edge in our local market and has made it possible for us to attain this degree of success."

ERA Real Estate, headquartered in Overland Park, Kansas is the second largest real estate franchise with 25,000 member brokers and sales associates in nearly 3,000 offices worldwide.

My Daze

DILLSBURG...Col. Bud Smith, after dinner speaker, historian, head member of Dillsburg Booster Club and a loyal Lion, relates this little tale of himself...Seems like Bud was delivering a speech to the Marietta Lions Club, and when the speech was concluded, they presented him with a cigar. Col. Smith, being a non-smoker, presented the cigar to his father-in-law...His father-in-law suspecting foul play from his erstwhile son-in-law, in turn, gave the cigar to a friend (?)...A few weeks later Bud learned that the cigar was a trick one, and the minute you lit the thing, a real ten dollar bill flew out one end...Problem: Wonder who finally latched on to that expensive cigar???

GENERALLY SPEAKING ...Bradley Flohr's gladiolas coming up nicely next door...Bingham kids (Charlie and Bill) attempting a new project...They are: building a small engine-powered soap box racer, providing they get the necessary funds with which to buy the engine...Methinks they will end up with a "foot powered job!!"...Welcome to the "Mac" McQuarrys...Just recently over from England, they make their home in Dillsburg. Saw two of their young'uns, positively fascinated by an American pin ball machine.

HOW CUM...some of you people don't write in and tell us some of the news of your town? We'd be glad to print anything you happen to send it. It might be twisted around so you'll never be able to recognize it, but WE'LL PRINT IT!! If you can recall some funny, or interesting incident that might make good reading, put it on a card and send it to: MY DAZE, c/o Gettysburg Times. Or better yet, drop it off at the Times office in person. You'll get a peep at one of the finest newspaper plants in the east...When you walk in, just up one of the sleeping desk occupants on the shoulder and introduce yourself. (If you don't see this column in print again-it has that last line that did it!)

INTERESTING PEOPLE ...Last week I met a very talented fellow in the name of Heilman. He resides in Mechanicsburg, and his business is of all things, refurbishing old cars...Charley Rider and John Baker both told me about him, as they had had him do some work on their cars. John, a 1911 Ford, and Charley has an old Buick. Heilman's place is right on the edge of town in an old converted barn. Among the old buggy parts, and scores of cans of paint, stands Rider's Buick with a new top in its final stages of completion. All of the sewing done on this black patent leather top is all the more remarkable because it was done on a sewing machine which is over 40 years old! In the back of the shop is an ancient four seater buggy, awaiting the master's touch. This one belongs to a fellow who is willing to wait almost a full year for complete restoration. Mr. Heilman specializes on body work and upholstery. He does not do any mechanical work at all. He's a genial old fellow, and will take time out to talk to you about the "days gone by" when he really knew how to make an automobile. He was trained in the automotive industry consisted of working on the old wooden bodied cars. He was one of the artisans who constructed the framework of those old classics...Funny thing-Mr. Heilman is busier now than he was when those old cars were in style...Herb Harris, Wednesday, July 29, 1958

Donald E. Jones

York Area Men Retire from Met-Ed

Donald E. Jones, 414 Range End Road, Dillsburg, retired July 31 as a lineman chief "A", hot stick, in the Dillsburg line department of Western Division, after more than 40 years with the Metropolitan Edison Co. He began his company career on Jan. 23, 1950, as a groundman in the Dillsburg line department and proceeded through the various line positions to his position at retirement.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones are planning bus trips and travel across the United States. He will also play golf, take walks and enjoy horse racing and hunting with bow and arrow and rifle.

Thomas F. Tome, 65 West Maple St., Dallastown, retired July 31 as a group supervisor-electrical equipment construction and maintenance, moving, from the Western Division electrical construction and maintenance department, after more than 39 years with Metropolitan Edison Co. He began his company career on June 19, 1951, as a semi-skilled laborer in the EC&M Department. Tome proceeded through positions as a utility construction and maintenance man and foreman of maintenance of York combustion turbines before becoming a group supervisor.

Mr. and Mrs. Tome plan a lot of golfing, along with gardening around their home and some traveling. Tome also plans some fishing.

REFLECTIONS OF A LIFETIME

My father and the horse trudged through blinding snow for the one mile trip to return in time to make the delivery. Even though I was soon present on that occasion, I could not have known the following if my father had not recounted it many times through the years. As I was pulled from the warm womb and coaxed to take that first breath of life, the doctor was heard to exclaim as he tossed me stark naked into an adjoining, cold bedroom, "It's not the boy I am worried about, it's the mother." No one will ever know what may have gone wrong that winter night but a doctor's evening of revelry may have been responsible for my mother's death nine years and one month later on February 3, 1928.

Who can recall much of his early years on this earth? Each of us so often tries to remember the earliest events of his life and there are some, without documentation, that I remember from the age of four and a half to five years. My recollection surely must have been jarred into reality at an early age for life in the country during World War I and the years immediately following were not easy ones. We had no car, no central heating, no bathroom and none of those comforts we have taken for granted during most of the twentieth century.

Who cannot remember with a degree of nostalgia some of the events which transpired early in life and the accommodations which that life had to offer? I remember living in one big room, the kitchen, with its big iron stove which kept us warm, heated our water, cooked our food, provided space for our bucket baths, and a place to entertain family and friends. Who cannot remember heating bricks in the stove to take to bed at night to keep one's feet warm in a cold, unheated bedroom? Who cannot remember those wonderful weekends when there was a fire in the living room and the stove pipe leading to the chimney which passed through the bedroom where my brother and I later would gather by it as we put on our homemade nightgowns? I remember, too, trips to the spring to bring water for our daily needs, following our parents as they performed the daily chores of taking care of the stock, days in the field during spring planting and harvesting in the fall, putting out a garden and pulling a chain down the little furrow my father had made and fertilized as the chain distributed the fertilizer - picking hard-shelled potato bugs for which we were paid the staggering sum of one penny for a hundred, butchering and threshing that glorious time when friends and neighbors helped each other to gain some semblance of a livelihood. There were fun times at picnics, and Saturday nights at the nearby community to pick up staples for the ensuing week. Sunday School and Church every week, and parents having friends in afterwards or being invited to another farm home for food and an afternoon of games. Yes, those were the days-days to be recalled and enjoyed in retrospect.

There has always been one very vivid experience in my early days and one which I truly remember as if it happened yesterday. The farm families in the early twenties visited relatives whenever possible and on the occasion we went to visit my maternal grandparents in the one horse open sleigh and were returning at night with the snow so drifted one could not see the road-a beautiful evening during which we were gliding along as the sleigh bells on the old gray mare were playing their usual rhythmic tune. When we headed down the farm lane toward the barn, the horse being cold and weary and seeing our place, bolted and jumped the traces and upset the sleigh. We were all thrown out-my father, my mother, my brother, and me and who moments before were all bundled up in our horse blanket and as warm as we could be, but as anxious to get home as the horse. Would you believe that I, the baby, couldn't be found, but soon was heard sequealing in a snowdrift aside of the road! Who do I remember this incident so vividly? As I was retrieved much to my mother's great relief, and as my Dad carried me the remaining distance home, my teeth chattered the whole way with a clicking sound I can still experience today as I type these words.

These and many other experiences I will remember before I was five and a half years old because it was then that we moved to the city of York for a two year period that will be recalled later in this episode.

To be continued next week.

Prize-Winning Driving Miss Daisy To Close Totem Pole Season

The play that has been charming audiences since the spring of 1987, won a Pulitzer Prize in 1988 and became a hit Academy Award winning film this past April, brings to a close the 1990 season at Totem Pole Playhouse. Alfred Uhry's DRIVING MISS DAISY plays August 14-26 at the Caledonia State Park summer theatre.

"The public's response to our including DAISY in our 40th Anniversary Season has been overwhelming," states Producing Artistic Director, Carl Schurr. "I think it's because this play tells such a universally tender and humorous story that sooner or later touches us all with its simple magic."

The play takes place from 1948 to 1973 mostly in Atlanta, Georgia. When Miss Daisy Werthan (Linde Hayen) totals her brand new Packard, her loving son Boolie (Wil Love) insists on hiring a chauffeur and selects Hoke Colebum (Keith Johnson), a loyal and caring employee. Miss Daisy mistrusts blacks and servants and refuses to co-operate but time slowly bonds the unlikely couple together into one of the most memorable friendships in the American theatre.

Because of popular demand, Totem Pole has added four additional performances of Driving Miss Daisy:

August 16 at 2:30 p.m., August 19 at 7:30 p.m., August 23 at 2:30 p.m., August 26 at 7:30 p.m.

For tickets to all shows and further information please stop by the box office or write: TOTEM POLE PLAYHOUSE, P.O. Box 603, Fayetteville, Pa 17222-17603.

Senior Service Line by Matilda Charles

NO DEFENSE NECESSARY. J M.R. says he's tired of my "encouraging old people who didn't have enough sense to save for their old age to take money from the government. At a time when we have a deep deficit in this country...(these) people should know better than to demand more. Tell them how the grasshopper played all summer while the ant stored his food and had enough to eat during the winter while the grasshopper starved...(That's) what they should have done. What's your defense to this?"

I have none. I believe in encouraging people to claim their rights — that's the American way — and Social Security is a right established over 50 years ago. Also, these programs are funded by the people who use them. One more thing: Job cuts, inflation, recessions, loss of industry — have made it impossible for the average person to raise a family, meet his or her basic bills, and save enough for self sufficiency in old age. I've said this before, but it bears repeating: A civilization that cannot care for those who cannot care for themselves is not civilized.

GRANDTRAVEL: Many of you have written to applaud the series on travel tips for seniors that we last spring. For those who asked for tips for seniors going abroad, the following is Part 1 of a series by Helena Koenig, founder of GRANDTRAVEL, tours for grandparents and grandchildren, and a member of Hilton Hotels' Corporate Senior Hilhonors Advisory Panel:

* Learn as much as you can about the culture, language and customs of your destination before you travel. This will enrich your travel experience and make touring memorable. Your travel representative or local library can provide information. Also, take a pocket dictionary abroad to help you communicate.

* Learn currency conversion rates before you depart and bring a pocket calculator to use when converting currency. Count your change carefully after making a purchase abroad.

* Exchange a small amount of dollars for the currency of your destination before departure or when you arrive at the airport to cover tips and other immediate expenses. Try using all foreign currency or convert it back to dollars before returning home.

Dollars & Sense by Bryon Elson

Under tax law, not all scholarship and fellowship payments receive equal treatment. Depending on the date you received the grant and the type of services you perform for the grantor, you may have to include some of the money in your taxable income.

If your scholarship and fellowship was awarded before August 17, 1986, the tax treatment remains the same as in the past. If you are a candidate for a degree, you may exclude from your taxable income the basic scholarship and fellowship grant, including the value of room and board.

In addition, you may exclude any grant funds specifically designated for travel, research, clerical help, or equipment.

However, you must actually spend these amounts for the purpose of the grant and within the terms of the grant, or funds may become taxable.

On the other hand, you must report as income any grant payments that you receive in exchange for employment services or research that benefits the grantor of the award.

As far as the IRS is concerned, payments to medical interns or residents, certain social service agency interns and those in similar positions are income, and do not qualify as either scholarships or fellowships.

The payment for services rule also applies to grants that require a student to work for outside employers. An example of this is a university grant that requires a journalism student to work as a regular staff employee of a local newspaper.

If you are not a candidate for a degree, you may still be eligible for certain tax benefits if your grant was made before August 17, 1986. Under these circumstances, you may exclude from your taxable income any amount received for such expenses as travel, research, clerical help, or equipment.

In addition, you can exclude up to $300 a month for each month in which you receive scholarship or fellowship payments. You may claim this exclusion for period of 36 months, consecutive or not.

However, once you exceed the 36-month limit, you must include in your gross income all amounts you receive under the grant, including funds designated for qualified expenses.

To complicate matters, the $300-a-month exclusion only applies if the grantor of the scholarship or fellowship is a tax-exempt organization.

Other acceptable grantors include any United States agency, state, or possession, a foreign government, or an organization created under the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961.
